Although all lawyers are charged with knowing the Rules of Professional Conduct, most lawyers don’t deal with conflict waivers every day. Still fewer do so against the backdrop of the always difficult circumstance of possible malpractice. If we think that we may have committed malpractice, we have important regulatory and fiduciary duties to inform the client concerned and to obtain the client’s consent if we are to continue on the matter involved. Although errors often trigger understandable embarrassment, this is not a situation where a lawyer can stick his or her respective head in the sand or should be rifling through the firm word processing system for something that looks like the right kind of waiver form.

Oregon lawyers have wise counsel a phone call away at the Professional Liability Fund. The PLF can assist lawyers with both evaluating a particular situation and providing an appropriate template for any required conflict waiver. In this column, we’ll first survey the regulatory duties involved and then discuss contacting the PLF.

Regulatory Duties

Under RPC 1.4—the “communication rule”—we have a duty to keep our clients apprised of material developments in their matters. Therefore, if a material “bad” event occurs, we have a responsibility to let our client know and to, in the phraseology of RPC 1.4(b), explain it “to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions[.]” Not all “bad” events, of course, involve malpractice. Simply because a motion was denied, for example, does not in and of itself imply anything about the skill with which the losing side argued. Further, we are permitted a reasonable period of time to evaluate a situation so that we can present the client with both the “bad” event and the range of resulting options in context. At the same time, the Oregon Supreme Court noted in In re Obert, 336 Or 640, 89 P3d 1173 (2004), that simply saying nothing is not an option and, at its most extreme, may fester into misrepresentation by omission.

Under RPC 1.7(a)(2)—the “conflict rule”—we have a duty to obtain a conflict waiver from our client if we have committed an arguable material error and wish to continue on the case. Again, not all errors or omissions necessarily trigger a conflict. The Oregon Supreme Court put it this way in In re Knappenberger, 337 Or 15, 28, 90 P3d 614 (2004): “Many errors by a lawyer may involve a low risk of harm to the client or a low risk of ultimate liability for the lawyer, thereby vitiating the danger that the lawyer’s own interests will endanger his or her exercise of professional judgment on behalf of the client.” The Supreme Court in Knappenberger declined to draw a bright line on when a conflict waiver is necessary in this context, noting (at 29) that a “conclusion will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case.” If that threshold is crossed, however, the Oregon State Bar in Formal Ethics Opinion 2005-61 concluded that a lawyer must obtain a conflict waiver from the client to continue on the matter.

Contacting the PLF

If we have committed what may arguably be a material error or omission, then we have a contractual duty under Section VII of the PLF Plan to notify the PLF. The same requirement would typically apply to excess carriers as well. The failure to do so could, in a given situation, put coverage at risk.

Beyond any contractual duties, contacting the PLF can be critical for two other reasons.

First, the PLF can help you gauge the nature of the problem, provide options (including, in some circumstances, “repair counsel”) and can assist you in determining whether or not it makes sense to withdraw or stay on. The PLF brings both a wealth of experience and a professional detachment that a lawyer caught in the middle of this kind of problem simply cannot replicate. Under most circumstances, consultation with claims counsel at the PLF will be protected from later discovery by the work product rule and, if outside counsel is appointed, the attorney-client privilege.

Second, if you wish to stay on, the PLF also has a form conflict waiver available on its web site. The template contains the “boilerplate” required by RPC 1.7 and points to where the individual lawyer will need to insert his or her explanation of the particular facts involved. The PLF’s template notes that it is not asking the client to waive any claim. Rather, the template explains that client consent is necessary for the lawyer to remain on the matter. Although some clients change lawyers in this circumstance, others welcome an avenue for a long-serving lawyer to continue.

Summing Up

Telling clients about mistakes is never easy. But, in those circumstances, it is essential that we inform our clients and that we use appropriate waivers if it makes sense to stay on the matter concerned.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Mark J. Fucile of Fucile & Reising LLP focuses on legal ethics, product liability defense and condemnation litigation. In his legal ethics practice, Mark handles professional responsibility, regulatory and attorney-client privilege matters and law firm related litigation for lawyers, law firms and legal departments throughout the Northwest. He is a past member of the Oregon State Bar’s Legal Ethics Committee, is a past chair of the Washington State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct Committee, is a member of the Idaho State Bar Professionalism & Ethics Section and is a co-editor of the OSB Ethical Oregon Lawyer, the WSBA Legal Ethics Deskbook and the WSBA Law of Lawyering in Washington. Mark also writes the monthly Ethics Focus column for the Multnomah (Portland) Bar's Multnomah Lawyer, the quarterly Ethics & the Law column for the WSBA NWLawyer (formerly Bar News) and is a regular contributor on risk management to the OSB Bar Bulletin, the Idaho State Bar Advocate and the Alaska Bar Rag. Mark’s telephone and email are 503.224.4895 and Mark@frllp.com.